

Sample Editorial Process

Please note that both the editorial process and review times vary considerably from journal to journal

However, most journals aim to communicate decisions to authors within four months of submission but a number of factors (e.g., the availability of referees) can influence this timeframe.

Typically, the editor assigned to your submission will solicit reviewer feedback before considering your submission for publication.

In that case, the editor will wait until he/she receives all reviewer comments on your submission. The editor will then email you directly concerning any revisions necessary or the decision made.

Please be assured that all editors and reviewers are regularly sent reminders to ensure that papers are dealt with as quickly as possible.
